Goods are provided mainly in the form of films, photobooks, and fundraising merchandise. Some films and videos are able to be rented or purchased. The photobooks are also available for purchase. Fundraising merchandise includes t-shirts, postcards, mousepads, and other items. Goods are also able to be purchased by organizations. In some cases, the Foundation may donate media content or other material to individuals or organizations if it advances the Foundation's purpose. For example, the local broadcasting network may be provided a film to show to the public as part of carrying out the purpose of sharing a cultural film we have created. In addition, the Sitting Bull College Library will be receiving a significant portion of our documentation from our recent emergency project. They will be organizing it in the form of a historical archive.

In addition, we provide educational material and other expertise to farming communities. We are open to helping any farming community interested in learning more about sustainable practices, but we provide help with the prerequisite of a strong relationship with the specific community. The communities are normally selected based on time spent there by a volunteer doing a documentation project.
